

In The Blanket of Solitude

The widow in her rocker by the barerroom fire holds a sheaf of poems by their edges in her lap

The fire flickers, yellow cool she waves the sheaf of poems

Smoke, a little, creeps inside the glacier of the past she offers him two or three and wraps herself with the rest

Published in White Crow, Spring 1997.